Teaser	A disposition of property upon death, for example a will, is placed in special official safekeeping at the local court during the person's lifetime. The custody data is transmitted electronically by the local court or notary's office to the Central Register of Wills and registered there.
Volltext	If you want to ensure that your disposition of property upon death (for example, your will) is found and opened in the event of inheritance, you can place it in special official safekeeping. This also protects your testamentary disposition from forgery or loss. If your testamentary disposition is notarized by a notary public (notarial deed), this person will arrange for the special official safekeeping. In the case of privately written (handwritten) wills, you can personally place them in special official custody at the local court. Notaries and custodial courts register dispositions of death electronically in the Central Register of Wills. The Central Register of Wills contains custody details of wills, inheritance contracts and other documents relevant to succession. In the event of death, the competent probate court and the custodian are automatically informed of the death and the registration. Probate courts can also check the register of wills to see whether a disposition of property upon death is in official custody. Contents of dispositions of death are not shown in the register of wills, but are kept sealed at the district court.

Modul	Sachverhalt
	You do not have to take any special action to register in the register of wills. Depositories are required by law to register. However, this does not apply to privately written wills that are not kept in official custody. These cannot be recorded in the Central Register of Wills.

Informationen
Hinweise

In certain cases, special official safekeeping is also arranged by a third party if you so wish, for example when a notarized will or inheritance contract is drawn up. The notary will then ensure that the document is placed in special official custody.

Rechtsbehelf

If official custody is refused, the Rechtspfleger shall decide by order. The testator requesting custody may lodge an appeal against the refusal for a limited period. If under state law a clerk of the court was functionally responsible instead of the Rechtspfleger, an appeal must be lodged.
