assistance independently.

An offer of support in everyday life can also cover several of the above-mentioned areas.

Examples of eligible offers for support in everyday life (AzUiA) are

- Care groups for people suffering from dementia
- Helpers' circles for the hourly relief of caregiving relatives or similarly close caregivers at home
- Day care in small groups
- Individual care by recognized helpers
- Family support services
- everyday companions
- care companions
- Service offers for household-related services.

In order for people in need of care to receive reimbursement for the services provided under the long-term care insurance scheme, you as the provider must first have the service recognized by the competent authority in accordance with the relevant state law. If you have received recognition,

- those in need of care from care level 1 have the option of reimbursement within the framework of the relief amount and
- those in need of care from care level 2 also have the option of reimbursement under the conversion entitlement.

The requirements for recognition are regulated on a state-specific basis.

Each federal state determines which authority is responsible for the respective recognition procedure. Depending on the type of offer, different authorities may be responsible for recognition in the state - this is
