| Teaser                        | If your employees need special support during training or at work due to a disability, you as an employer can apply for work assistance.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| Volltext                      | Individual employment assistance supports people with disabilities in training or employment. The employment agency will coordinate the support for your company with you as the employer. Examples of work aids are access ramps, sanitary facilities or conversions in the company. The costs of work aids also include the necessary ancillary costs, for example planning costs, fees and expert costs. Once a subsidy has been granted, your company becomes the owner of the work aid. Depending on your decision, the employment agency can cover all or part of the costs of the job aid for you. Subsidies for work aids for people with disabilities are discretionary; you do not have a legal claim to them. |

| Voraussetzungen  | Under the following conditions, you as an employer can receive a subsidy from the Employment Agency for work aids in the company: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The work aid is necessary for the permanent participation of the person with disabilities in working life.</li> <li>• You do not have to bear the costs of the work aid yourself. As an employer, you are generally responsible for ensuring that the workplace is suitable for people with disabilities and people with equivalent disabilities.</li> <li>• It would be unreasonable or disproportionately expensive for you to implement the work aid.</li> <li>• The work aid is also required for a disabled-friendly workplace or training place.</li> <li>• The person for whom the job aid is intended has a disability or is at risk of becoming disabled.</li> <li>• The employment agency is the responsible rehabilitation provider for the person with a (potential) disability. This usually applies to people before initial vocational training and if no other rehabilitation provider (e.g. employers' liability insurance association or German pension insurance) is responsible.</li> </ul> |
