weeks, for example because you have found a job or are doing an internship, your unemployment registration is no longer valid. If you are then unemployed again, you must register as unemployed again.

The effect of the unemployment registration expires if you take up gainful employment - regardless of its duration - and have not informed your employment agency of this immediately.

If you are temporarily unable to work and the employment agency is not open on the first day of your recovery, you should register as unemployed on the last day of your incapacity to work at the latest. Otherwise you could suffer disadvantages. If you are receiving sickness benefit and your health insurance fund has informed you that this entitlement will expire and you cannot resume your previous employment, you can register as unemployed even if you are still on sick leave. If you are ill or have other health restrictions and are unable to register as unemployed in person, you can also appoint a representative to do this for you. However, you must then report to your employment agency in person as soon as the reason for your incapacity no longer applies. Alternatively, you can of course also make use of the option of electronic unemployment registration.
