Sachverhalt

The basis for the entitlement to a contribution subsidy are

- the annual income of the farmer and
- the annual income of their spouses or partners who are not permanently separated.

The amount of the contribution subsidy depends on

- the amount of the contribution to be paid and
- the determined annual income.

Up to an annual income of 30 percent of the reference value in the social insurance of the respective year, the subsidy amounts to 60 percent of the contribution. Thereafter, the contribution subsidy decreases linearly depending on the annual income.

The agricultural and forestry earned income is to be taken from the last income tax assessment issued by the tax office.

This applies,

- if an income tax assessment has been issued for one of the last 4 calendar years for farms whose

- taxable profit is determined in accordance with the requirements for bookkeeping companies, or
- whose profit is estimated by the competent tax authority.

Otherwise, the earned income from agriculture and forestry is derived from the so-called economic value of your farm. This calculation is carried out for you by the Landwirtschaftliche Alterskasse.

The contribution subsidy ends as soon as the requirements are no longer met. You must therefore always report changes in income immediately.

Erforderliche Unterlagen

- Application for contribution subsidy
 - most recent income tax assessment from the last 4 calendar years or
 - written proof of income earned in the calendar year before last.

If necessary, you can find out which documents are required in your case from the application form.

- If the application is submitted by other persons:
 - Power of attorney or
 - Order of the court

Voraussetzungen

As a farmer or the spouse of a farmer, you are subject to compulsory insurance with the Agricultural Pension Fund. You have received a notification of this.

You can apply for a contribution subsidy for your contribution and for the contribution for family members working with you if:

- Your annual income does not exceed 60 percent of the reference amount in social insurance for the respective year.
 - The annual income is calculated from:
 - the annual income of the farmer and
 - the annual income of spouses or partners who are not permanently separated from them.
 - Half of the income is attributed to the spouses. The same applies to civil partners.
 - In total, the income in a marriage may not exceed twice the above-mentioned limit.
 - All types of income under income tax law are taken into account, as well as income in lieu of income, such as pensions or sick pay.
