Teaser	If your employees have worked abroad, you must report the duration to your employers' liability insurance association or the Federal and Railway Accident Insurance on request.
Volltext	Voluntary foreign insurance contributions are levied separately from domestic accident insurance contributions. The basis for the contributions for the foreign insurance is the number of months in which your employees work abroad. Partial months are calculated in full. It may happen that an assignment abroad ends prematurely, but the employers' liability insurance association or the Federal and Railways Accident Insurance Fund does not find out about this. In order for the contributions to be calculated correctly, the Employer's Liability Insurance Association or the Federal and Railway Accident Insurance will ask your company whether the stored months abroad are correct. Here, your company has the opportunity to correct the months abroad previously registered with the employers' liability insurance association or the Federal and Railway Accident Insurance in good time.
