rights regulations if, for example:

- Your train or ship arrives at its destination severely delayed and you do not receive appropriate compensation.
- Your train is expected to arrive at your destination very late and you were not given the opportunity to withdraw from the journey or continue your journey on another train.
- your bus or boat is severely delayed or canceled and you are not offered an alternative journey or the opportunity to cancel your trip.
- the transport company does not offer you anything to eat or drink if your journey is severely delayed.
- the transport company does not organize an alternative onward journey or overnight accommodation for you in certain circumstances.
- you are restricted in your mobility due to an illness or disability and you do not receive free assistance, for example with boarding, changing and alighting.
- you are not informed of deviations in the itinerary before and during the journey.

If the transport company is likely to have violated the passenger rights regulations, the Federal Railway Authority will conduct administrative proceedings. This means

- the Federal Railway Authority contacts the transport company and
- asks the company for a statement.

Under certain conditions, you are entitled to compensation or a refund of the fare. The payments are handled between you and the transport company.

Erforderliche Unterlagen
