Teaser	If you want to test new technologies in telecommunications, you must first apply to the Federal Network Agency for frequencies for experimental radio.
Volltext	To test new technologies in telecommunications, you need frequencies in advance for test radio. You can apply for these from the Federal Network Agency (BNetzA). This includes • the development and testing of radio equipment, • the use of radio equipment for specific research purposes and • the testing of new operating procedures. The BNetzA checks whether your trials could interfere with other frequency uses that are listed in the Frequency Ordinance or in the frequency plan. If no interference is to be expected, you will be allocated the corresponding frequency ranges.
