Teaser	Some children and adolescents have difficulties in their personal development. It is difficult for them to approach other children, to get involved in groups or to cope with their problems independently.
Volltext	Participation in social group work is intended to help older children and adolescents overcome developmental difficulties and behavioral problems. Social group work can be useful for children and adolescents if they: • repeatedly get into violent clashes. • have little self-confidence and behave conspicuously. • cannot hold their own. In social group work, older children and adolescents meet regularly under the guidance of trained pedagogical staff. Social group work encourages social learning. In doing so, it conveys positive experiences and insights and thus promotes respect for others and one's own self-confidence. In this way, the young person should become an independent and community-oriented personality. Goals and content depend on the topic of social group work. Contents can be: • Development of group dynamics. • Recognizing triggers of one's own anger and aggression. • Perceiving and expressing one's own feelings.
