Teaser	If the planning of your building project deviates from the applicable regulations, you can submit an application for an exception or exemption from the regulations.
Volltext	If your building project deviates from building regulations (e.g. from the HBO, the provisions of a development plan, an urban development statute or the building use ordinance), you must apply separately for approval of the deviation and justify it. This applies to projects that require planning permission, projects that do not require planning permission and projects that do not require planning permission. Even if the regulations that are to be deviated from are not examined in the approval

Voraussetzungen

A deviation from HBO regulations or from regulations based on the HBO may be permitted if it is compatible with public interests. The purpose of the respective requirement to be deviated from must also be taken into account and the neighboring interests protected under public law must be considered.

An exception to the provisions of a development plan or other urban development statutes or to the provisions of the German Land Use Ordinance may be permitted if it is expressly provided for in terms of type and scope. An exemption from the provisions of a development plan or other urban development statutes or from the provisions of the Land Use Ordinance may be permitted if it does not affect the main features of the planning and is also compatible with public interests when neighboring interests are taken into account and:
