Volltext	If you or a relative need to be transported in connection with the treatment of an illness because this journey cannot be carried out privately, you will need an ambulance transport or a patient journey (e.g. order by the attending physician). Ambulance transport includes journeys in the event of illness requiring the accompaniment of medical staff or the special equipment of an ambulance. An ambulance ride is any other trip made by a sick person, such as a taxi. If you or a relative require a transport service in connection with a health insurance service for compelling medical reasons, the health insurance company will cover the travel costs for <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• services provided on an inpatient basis,</li> <li>• rescue trips to the hospital even if inpatient treatment is not required,</li> <li>• other journeys by insured persons who require professional assistance or the special facilities of an ambulance during the journey or for whom this is to be expected due to their condition, and</li> <li>• Travel by insured persons to outpatient treatment, to pre- or post-inpatient treatment or to outpatient surgery in hospital, if this avoids or shortens a full or partial inpatient hospital treatment offered in itself or if it is not feasible.</li> </ul> In case of doubt, you must pay for transport services to outpatient treatment that you arrange without consultation with your health insurance company. In any case, please clarify with your health insurance company beforehand whether and to what extent it will cover the costs. If you are currently receiving benefits from a social welfare provider, it is also worth
