Volltext	Depending on their hazard potential, their location (above ground, underground) and their location in a protected area (water or mineral spring protection area, flood plain), installations for handling substances hazardous to water (e.g. heating oil consumer systems, petrol stations, ...) must be reported to the competent water authority and inspected by an expert body. The legal basis for this is the Plant Ordinance (VAwS). For example, above-ground fuel oil consumer systems from a storage quantity of more than 1 m³ are also subject to recurring inspection before commissioning and in the protected area, underground heating oil consumer systems are generally subject to inspection before commissioning, recurring and during decommissioning. Installations in which other substances hazardous to water are stored are subject to staggered inspection obligations, depending on the hazard level. The tests are carried out by expert bodies in accordance with § 22 VAwS and supervised by the competent water authorities. Expert bodies may act in accordance with the extent to which they are approved. Approvals may be limited to certain test areas or limited in time. Approvals from other federal states are also valid in Hesse.
