You are excluded from the right to vote if you do not have the right to vote in the Federal Republic of Germany as a result of a court ruling. Exclusion from the right to vote is not contrary to the general principle of equality in Article 3 of the Basic Law (Grundgesetz - GG) and the principles of equality and universality of the vote, because disenfranchisement does not occur automatically, but may only be imposed by a judge's decision in the presence of legally defined facts.

However, this exclusion as a result of a German court ruling is only possible in a few cases expressly mentioned in the Criminal Code (StGB) and the Federal Constitutional Court Act (BVerfGG) and applies for a maximum of two to five years. You will be excluded from the right to vote if you have been sentenced to a prison term of at least six months or at least one year for the following offenses, for example:

- Preparation of a war of aggression and high treason against the federal government, treason and disclosure of state secrets
- Attack against organs and representatives of foreign states
- Obstruction of elections and falsification of election documents
- Bribery of members of parliament
- acts of sabotage of means of defense or intelligence service endangering security (in this case, a prison sentence of at least one year is required).

In these cases, the disqualification from voting is at the discretion of the court in accordance with the special criminal law provisions and is not an automatic consequence of a conviction for these offenses.

In addition, you may be deprived of your right to vote by the Federal Constitutional Court due to the violation of fundamental rights. There are no other grounds for exclusion.

The previously existing grounds for exclusion of the permanent appointment of a guardian for the management of all affairs and placement in a
