Volltext	Elementary school students and vocational school students must attend classes at the school in whose catchment area they live. Under certain conditions, they can attend another school upon request. Elementary school Every public elementary school has a school district. All pupils who live in this district must, in principle, also attend this elementary school. As a rule, the school district corresponds to the municipal area. If there are several elementary schools in a municipality or city, the municipalities and cities can divide their area into several school districts or leave the schools in a common school district so that there is a free choice of school. Vocational school Public vocational schools, including the corresponding public vocational special schools, have a catchment area. The size of this catchment area depends on the number of trainees in an apprenticeship occupation. A catchment area can be small (in the case of frequent training occupations), but can also apply to the whole of Saxony or the whole of Germany (in the case of less frequent training occupations). Vocational school classes must be taken at the vocational school in whose catchment area the student's place of residence
