part of the prostate examination)

- from the age of 50, additional examination of the colon and rectum Questioning about faecal abnormalities and advice on colon cancer Palpation of the rectum Stool examination for hidden blood
- from the age of 55: either a complete colonoscopy, which can be repeated once after ten years at the earliest if the findings are normal, or a faecal examination for hidden blood every two years

Note: You may have to pay for other cancer screening examinations (e.g. targeted skin inspection by a dermatologist, mammography before 50, measurement of intraocular pressure) yourself if they are purely screening measures and are not carried out to clarify a suspected disease.

If you notice any abnormalities during self-monitoring, even between examinations (e.g. lumps in the breast, visible blood in the stool), you should contact your family doctor immediately.
