Teaser	If you want to transfer your fishing rights completely to someone else, you must conclude a fishing lease agreement with this person and have it approved.
Volltext	If you wish to transfer your fishing rights in full to another person, you can lease them to them. To do this, you conclude a fishing lease agreement with the tenant. You submit this lease agreement to the supreme fisheries authority for approval. The contract becomes effective upon approval. If you make a change to a fishing lease agreement, you must also submit this to the supreme fisheries authority for approval. If you terminate the contract, it is sufficient to notify the authority. If you do not submit the lease for approval, the contract may not be effective. This means that the contract only becomes fully effective when you submit it to the supreme fishing authority and it approves the contract.
