Volltext	Trees and bushes, habits, noises, cats, dogs and, of course, children: there are many reasons why a neighborly community can turn into a tangible dispute. There are many ways back to peaceful coexistence. And there are clear rules for many cases. The arbitration office is set up to settle disputes in neighborly matters (i.e. civil disputes) on a voluntary basis. The Arbitration Board should always be called in if the regulations put in place by the responsible authority (e.g. building regulations office, public order office) are not sufficient and the neighborly situation threatens to escalate. The Schleswig-Holstein State Conciliation Act also stipulates that legal action can only be taken in neighboring disputes if the parties involved have previously visited a so-called conciliation office and tried to reach an agreement there. Conciliation offices in this sense are, on the one hand,
