Volltext	As part of the official monitoring of foodstuffs and consumer goods, random samples of foodstuffs, cosmetics, consumer goods and tobacco products are regularly taken to check their marketability. Economic operators can have the samples examined by private experts (counter-sample experts) at their own expense in order to refute complaints by the monitoring authorities and to be able to prove that they have fulfilled their duty of care. As a private expert, you require a license to examine officially retained samples. You must have the required training in your respective field and have completed two years of practical work in this field. In addition to your technical competence, you must also be able to prove that you have a suitable testing laboratory to carry out the examination properly. Only those private experts who are authorized for this activity by the competent authorities of the federal state in which they have their headquarters (headquarters of the laboratory) are authorized to test the cross-checks or duplicate samples (excluding animal feed) specified in Section 43 (1) sentence 2 of
