maintenance and the costs of upbringing.

The Youth Welfare Office always bases its decisions on the best interests of the child. This also concerns the question of contact between the child and its natural parents. For example, it can be agreed that the natural parents will visit their child at agreed times during the duration of the foster care relationship or that they will also care for their child alone for a certain period of time (e.g. at the weekend).

Note: Foster families are carefully checked by the Youth Welfare Office for their suitability and prepared for their task.

Voraussetzungen

There is an emergency or a particularly severe crisis situation in the family.

Kosten

The natural parents must contribute to the costs of full-time care according to their financial possibilities. They must also pay child benefit and possible maintenance payments for the child's upkeep.

Verfahrensablauf

The custodial parents must apply for help with upbringing at the responsible youth welfare office. The Youth Welfare Office will check whether full-time foster care is the appropriate help in this case.

Usually, the natural parents can express wishes when choosing the foster family (e.g. general living situation or religious orientation). They can also suggest a foster family themselves (e.g. relatives). Depending on the degree of kinship, the youth welfare office must determine their suitability as foster parents.

The Youth Welfare Office, the natural parents and the foster parents agree on the exact structure of the foster care relationship in an assistance plan with the participation of the child.

The Youth Welfare Office supervises and supports both the natural parents and the foster parents during the foster care relationship. In the case of long-term foster care, regular meetings take place in which all parties
