documents at the instigation of the building authority. This gives them the opportunity to raise objections to the building project within two weeks.

Once all comments have been received and the building application has been reviewed, the decision is made: The building permit is granted, granted only with certain conditions and requirements or the building application is rejected.

Construction of the project may only begin once the building permit has been granted and the building licence, the so-called "red dot", has been issued.

A building inspection under public law only takes place if the building authority has expressly ordered this.

Note: Firing systems may only be put into operation once the authorised district chimney sweep has certified that they are fire-safe and that the combustion gases are safely discharged.
