Teaser	Tolerated foreigners can obtain a residence permit for employment if they meet certain requirements.
Volltext	As a tolerated foreign national, you can obtain a residence permit for employment if you have completed qualified vocational training or a university degree in Germany. Qualified vocational training exists if you have completed vocational training in a state-recognized or comparable regulated occupation. The training must have lasted at least two years. If you have obtained your university degree abroad, you can obtain a residence permit if your foreign degree has been legally recognized in Germany or is comparable to a German university degree. The Central Office for Foreign Education is responsible for the recognition of foreign university degrees in Germany. It is also necessary that you have been working for two years without interruption with your foreign university degree in an occupation appropriate to your degree. Employment is deemed appropriate if it usually requires an academic degree and the knowledge acquired with the university degree is at least partially or indirectly required. Shorter interruptions of employment, which should generally not exceed a total duration of three months, are harmless.

Sachverhalt

You can also obtain a residence permit if you have acquired your professional qualification abroad, have been in qualified employment for three years without interruption and have not been dependent on public funds (with the exception of benefits to cover the necessary costs of accommodation and heating) for your livelihood and that of your family members or other household members within the last year before applying for the residence permit. Qualified employment is deemed to exist if it is usually exercised by persons with skills, knowledge and abilities acquired in qualified vocational training or academic education. Shorter interruptions (up to three months) are generally harmless.

The residence permit is issued for a limited period for the duration of the employment. Holders of a tolerated stay permit for training will be granted a residence permit for two years if they wish to pursue employment that corresponds to the qualification acquired during vocational training.
