| Volltext                   | Forests may only be cleared and converted to another type of use (conversion) with the prior approval of the competent authority under federal state law. When deciding on a clearing or a conversion application, the interests of the general public and the rights, obligations and economic interests of the forest owner must be weighed up against each other. Forest clearance can also be approved for a certain period of time (temporary). The applicant is obliged to compensate for the negative consequences of the clearing. In other words, compensation for the loss of forest must be provided (usually replacement afforestation). If defined area sizes according to UVPG, Annex 1 are exceeded, there is an obligation to carry out a (preliminary) environmental impact assessment.                                                                                                                                                         |
