| Teaser                   | In insolvency proceedings, an insolvency plan may, inparticular, contain a provision for the preservation of acompany. Insolvency proceedings may be openedagainst the assets of any natural person or legal entity.  |
| Volltext                 | Insolvency proceedings are court proceedings. It servesto liquidate a debtor's assets and distribute theproceeds to his creditors. A different arrangement canbe made in an insolvency plan, in particular for thepreservation of a company.Insolvency proceedings are opened only uponapplication. The petition may be filed by the debtor orthe creditors. The debtor's petition must beaccompanied by a list of creditors and their claims. Ifthe debtor has a business operation which has notbeen discontinued, certain information - e.g. thehighest claims - shall be specially indicated in the list.Insolvency proceedings may be opened against theassets of any natural person or legal entity. Insolvencyproceedings may also be opened, inter alia, in respectof the assets of a company without legal personality(e.g. general partnership, limited partnership and civillaw partnership). In addition to creditors, any memberof the representative body and, in the case of acompany without legal personality or a partnershiplimited by shares, any personally liable partner, shallbe entitled to file a petition for commencement ofinsolvency proceedings in respect of the assets of alegal entity or a company without legal personality.The commencement of insolvency proceedings issubject to the existence of a ground forcommencement. A general ground for opening |
|                          | insolvency proceedings is the debtor's inability to pay.If the debtor applies for the opening of insolvencyproceedings, an opening can also take place if the   |

|                          | debtor's insolvency is imminent. In the case of a legal entity, overindebtedness is also a ground for opening.   |
|                          | The insolvency court shall reject the application forcommencement of insolvency proceedings if thedebtor's assets are not expected to be sufficient tocover the costs of the proceedings. If the insolvencyproceedings are opened, the insolvency court appointsan insolvency administrator and requests the creditorsto file their claims with the insolvency administratorwithin a certain period.   |
