Volltext	If you are the owner of real property (or, in the new federal states, the user of agricultural and forestry property) that is not exempt from real property tax, the tax office will issue a real property tax assessment notice to you. This land tax assessment notice serves the municipality as the basis for the land tax assessment notice to be issued. In the case of land tax, the subject of the tax is the real property as defined in the Valuation Act. The real estate tax is assessed in a three-stage procedure. The so-called standard value to be determined by the tax office is decisive for the calculation of the property tax. The tax assessment amount is calculated by applying a tax assessment figure to the assessed value. In the case of agriculture and forestry in the new federal states, the standard value is replaced by the substitute economic value. The notice of assessed value is the basis for the notice of land tax assessment, and the notice of land tax assessment is the basis for the notice of land tax assessment. If you have objections to the amount of the assessed value of the real property, you must appeal against the notice of assessed value within the appeal period; if you have objections to the tax assessment figure, you must appeal against the notice of real property tax assessment figure. The basic tax rate for land in the old federal states is between 2.6 and 3.5 percent, for land in the new federal states it is between 5.0 and 10 percent; for agricultural and forestry operations it is 6 percent in both the old and new federal states. Under certain conditions, you can be exempt from property tax. This is the case, for example, if you are a non-profit corporation and the property is used exclusively and directly for non-profit purposes. However, an exemption is usually not possible if the property is used for agricultural, forestry or residential purposes. You can apply for an exemption from property tax at the tax office.

Erforderliche Unterlagen

The basis for the property tax assessment amount is already laid in the value determination procedure. The tax office will therefore request you - if necessary - to submit a declaration for the determination of the assessed value, enclosing the declaration forms. If necessary, the tax office will ask you to enclose further documents. If you wish to apply for a property tax exemption, please contact your tax office to find out how and which documents should be enclosed with the application.

Voraussetzungen

Tax liability occurs when you are the owner of real property.

Verfahrensablauf

If you have acquired a property or built on a property that you own, you may receive a request from your tax office to submit a declaration to establish a standard value. The tax office will then allocate to you a unit value that has already been determined or update the unit value. The value determined during the determination of the standard value forms the basis for the property tax assessment. Multiplied by the tax assessment number, it results in the property tax assessment amount. The tax office informs you of this amount in a notice. These notices have a permanent effect, i.e. as long as the factual and legal circumstances of the property do not change, these notices remain in effect for the future. The municipality entitled to levy the tax also receives notification of the amount of the assessed property tax. It will determine the property tax on this basis.
