Volltext	A parenting support worker can help your child in everyday life, in dealing with you as parents and with social problems. Possible forms of help are • Talking about problems, fears and behavior • Help with coming to terms with stressful experiences • Support in solving problems with family, friends, teachers or other people • Support with visits to the authorities • for older young people: Support in finding work and accommodation, help in separating from parents • Help with becoming independent Note: In contrast to "socio-educational family support", a parenting support worker concentrates their help largely on the child or young person in question. If possible, he involves the social environment.
