Volltext	From 1 July 2013, dog owners must have proof of competence (dog licence). The proficiency test can be taken at the competent authority. Anyone who has demonstrably kept a dog (or cared for a legal entity) for at least two years continuously within the last 10 years prior to taking up dog ownership is considered competent by experience. If the dog is registered for dog tax in the name of a person or if a liability insurance contract is in the name of this person, these are indications that this person is the owner of the dog in the legal sense. If other persons, e.g. children living in the household, regularly handle, lead and care for the dog, they are not considered owners in the legal sense. If, for example, children leave their parents' household and take the dog with them, the new owner must prove his or her own expertise by taking a theoretical and practical examination. In addition, certain groups of people are found to be competent: e.g. veterinarians, persons who take usability tests for hunting dogs or have successfully passed such an examination with a dog, animal shelter operators, service dog handlers and disabled companion dog handlers. However, if such a dog becomes conspicuous, e.g. complaints about it are received by the competent authority, the competent authority can also prescribe the expertise
