Volltext	The electronic residence titles (eAT) are issued and handed out as a separate document in credit card format with additional electronic functions. Inside the card, the eAT has a contactless chip on which biometric features (features: photograph and two fingerprints after reaching the age of 6), ancillary provisions in connection with the residence permit (e.g. for gainful employment) and personal data are stored. In addition, the chip receives an electronic proof of identity and the possibility to use an electronic signature. The following residence permits are issued in the format of the electronic residence title (eAT): <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Residence permit</li> <li>• Settlement permit</li> <li>• EC long-term residence permit</li> <li>• Residence card for third-country national family members of an EU citizen or of an EEA national             <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Permanent residence card for third-country national family members of an EU citizen or of an EEA national</li> <li>• Residence permit for Swiss nationals and their third-country family members if they opt for an eAT</li> </ul> </li> </ul>

Verfahrensablauf

The introduction of the electronic residence title (eAT) has an impact on the entire processes at the competent authority. In any case, a waiting time of four to six weeks is to be expected between the application and delivery of the eAT, as the cards are produced exclusively at the Bundesdruckerei in Berlin.

Due to the need to store biometric data on the chip inside the card, two fingerprints will have to be taken from applicants (including children and adolescents **aged 6 and over**). Therefore, a **personal interview** is necessary in all cases - even with existing authorizations. Longer processing and waiting times at the responsible office are to be expected.

The previous residence titles, which were affixed to the travel documents as a label, will remain valid even after the introduction of the eAT, at the latest until 31.08.2021. An issuance of the eAT before the expiry of the valid residence permit is therefore only provided for if there is a legitimate interest in the reissue.
