Volltext	As an impaired person (so-called injured party), you receive medical treatment for health impairments that have been recognized as a consequence of an injury or have been caused by a recognized consequence of an injury. The purpose of medical treatment is to <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• To eliminate or improve health disorders or the impairment of the ability to work or earn a living caused by them,</li> <li>• to reduce suffering,</li> <li>• to avoid, overcome or reduce the need for care or to prevent its aggravation,</li> <li>• to remedy physical complaints</li> <li>• to alleviate the consequences of the injury</li> <li>• or to enable the fullest possible participation in society.</li> </ul> As a severely disabled person, you will also receive medical treatment for health disorders that are not recognized as the result of an injury. However, this comprehensive entitlement does not apply if you have corresponding claims against another social insurance provider (e.g. health insurance fund). Restrictions also apply, for example, if you exceed certain income limits. Furthermore, you and your dependants can receive health treatment benefits. However, your entitlement to health treatment is excluded if you already have a corresponding entitlement from another social insurance provider (e.g. health insurance fund). Restrictions also apply to certain income limits. Health and medical treatment benefits are generally provided as benefits in kind.
