Teaser	Each corpse must be examined externally by a doctor (post-mortem examination). The purpose of the post-mortem examination is to determine the occurrence of death, as well as the time and cause of death.
Volltext	Doctors in private practice as well as doctors in the emergency and rescue service must carry out the post-mortem examination and issue the death certificate. This also applies to doctors in hospitals and comparable institutions for those who died there. Public health officers of the competent lower health authority are to be consulted on a subordinate basis. The doctor verifies the identity of the deceased, examines the body and determines the death, the time, the nature and cause of the death. If there are indications of a non-natural death (e.g. in the event of an accident, suspicion of third-party influence), the police or the public prosecutor's office must be notified. The costs of issuing the death certificate must be paid by the person liable to bear the costs (usually relatives); they are based on the scale of fees for physicians (GOÄ).
