Teaser	You co-finance the construction and provision of a public water supply facility in accordance with the principle of solidarity through production contributions for the public water supply facility.
Volltext	The local contribution and fee statutes for the water supply statutes (BGS / WAS) stipulate that property owners who have the opportunity to connect their property to a public water supply facility must generally pay (one-off) production contributions. They thus participate in the financing of this facility according to the solidarity principle (every owner in the facility area is required to contribute). The amount of the contribution is often based on the size of the property and floor area; a certain contribution rate is payable per In the course of constructing such a public facility, municipalities also have the option of demanding so-called advance payments from the property owners prior to completion, e.g. in order to reduce the municipal borrowing required for the construction measures. Advance payments are offset against the final settlement (final production contribution) after completion of the construction work. It should also be noted that a municipality can also levy so-called improvement contributions after the initial construction of a facility if, for example, it has modernized or upgraded the long-standing facility. Please contact your local authority for more information on the specific local regulations.
