Teaser	With extracurricular homework help, the Free State of Bavaria promotes the linguistic integration of school-age children and young people with a migration background who are legally and permanently resident in Bavaria or have good prospects of staying.
Volltext	The German language is the most important basis for social, societal and professional integration. School-age children and young people with a migrant background and school-age children and young asylum seekers with good prospects of staying at Bavarian general education schools between the first and tenth grades who, due to significant language deficits, meet the requirements for attending a German support class / a German support course or a transition class (currently: a German class or a measure from DeutschPLUS) can therefore also receive extracurricular homework help with a focus on German support. It supplements the existing state-funded school and extracurricular language support measures if there is a need for further German support and this is confirmed by the school. Purpose The aim of the funding is to support the acquisition of language skills by young people with a migration background and young asylum seekers with good prospects of remaining in Bavaria at general education schools between the first and tenth grades, thus enabling their immediate integration. Object In addition to the school and extracurricular measures already funded by the state, extracurricular homework
