- be equipped in such a way that it can meet the needs and protection of those seeking help,
- have a concept according to which the women admitted are able to care for themselves and their children independently and to take on the task of bringing up their children with the support of suitable specialist staff; the concept should also describe the extent to which women with special needs (e.g. women with disabilities or several children) can be admitted
- provide a certain number of specialist staff for counseling and supporting women and children as well as for management and leadership (see guidelines),
