Volltext	The so-called Hercules shrub (giant hogweed), which looks impressive with its height of up to 2 to 4 meters and the large white flower umbels, is spreading more and more and causes problems nationwide for health and ecological reasons. Direct skin contact with Hercules should be avoided, as photosensitizing substances in all parts of the plant in connection with the UV radiation of sunlight lead to a strong allergic reaction of the skin and severe, burn-like symptoms that only heal slowly. For more information and advice on how to control the Hercules shrub see links.

Hinweise	The fight against the Hercules shrub on public land is the task of the district offices. In order to consistently push the plant back, it is necessary to also combat the populations on private land, as otherwise they can spread again from there. The help of the citizens is required and the owners of affected private properties are appealed to to take care of the removal of the Herculean bushes (see link for effective control
