Teaser	If you want to lay cables underground in public spaces and are not a cable operator, you will need a special use permit in advance.
Volltext	Streets, paths or public spaces are usually dedicated to the public and for common use. If you lay cables under public areas that are intended to serve private purposes, this represents a special use of public space. You must apply for a permit (special use permit) from the responsible authority in advance. Examples of special use are: Laying lightning protection cables Laying of lines for electricity, gas, district heating, water and sewage with house connections
Erforderliche Unterlagen	Documents setting out the type and extent of the special use (for example, a sketch with details of the dimensions)
Voraussetzungen	The space must be kept free for future use. There must be a special need (hardship case) for the need to lay the cables. They must not compromise traffic safety. They must not disproportionately affect the ease of traffic flow. They must not disproportionately affect public use by passers-by. They must not disproportionately affect or wear out path components. They must not disproportionately restrict public interests, including the generation of revenue from the use of the path. They must not disproportionately restrict the public or private rights
