Teaser	If you as parents are not married to each other when your child is born, you can obtain joint custody by submitting both declarations of custody.
Volltext	If you, as parents of a child together, are not married to each other at the time of the child's birth, only the mother has custody. This does not apply if you as parents have made a joint custody declaration or a different court decision has been made regarding custody. Written information can be provided about the mother's sole custody, the so-called negative certificate. If you would like to have joint custody, both parents must declare this to the responsible authority or a notary and have it certified. Paternity must first be acknowledged. You can also submit the custody declaration if your child has not yet been born but has already been conceived. However, this is still possible and necessary after the birth if you do not want to marry each other and do not want to seek a legal settlement. A declaration of care must be publicly notarized. You can arrange for this to be done at the responsible authority or, for a fee, at a notary. After
