Teaser	Did you get divorced and then changed your family name? Then you need to apply for a new identity card if you do not have a valid passport document with the new name.
Volltext	After a name change, your identity card is no longer valid. If you have had your surname changed, for example after a divorce or the annulment of a civil partnership, you must apply for a new ID card. There is one exception: as long as you have a valid passport document, i.e. passport or provisional passport, with the new name, you do not have to apply for a new identity card. The EU logo on the front of the ID card, introduced from August 2, 2021, does not mean that ID cards without this logo become invalid. The period of validity depends on your age at the time of application: under 24 years: identity card is valid for 6 years. 24 years and older: ID card is valid for 10 years. A provisional identity card is valid for a maximum of 3 months. You can submit the application to any Hamburg Service. Applications can be submitted to any other identity card authority if there is an important reason. In this case, a non-responsibility surcharge applies, which means that the costs of the issuance

When applying, a non-responsibility surcharge applies, which means that the costs of the issuance increase.

You can apply for an identity card in person at the Hamburg Service or, if you have more than one place of residence, at the identity card authority at your main place of residence. You can also apply for your identity card at any other identity card authority. But you need an important reason for this. If you contact the identity card authority you have selected beforehand, you can find out whether and to what extent they will recognize your reason. You can make an appointment online or by phone. When applying, fingerprints are taken for storage in the document. You can arrange the pick-up date online. You can find out what options your Hamburg Service offers when you apply for your identity card.
