Teaser	If you want to slaughter certain animals at home for your own consumption, you must have the meat of these animals officially tested for trichinae before processing.
Volltext	Trichinae are parasites (roundworms) that can be transmitted to humans through the consumption of meat from infected animals and can thus cause disease. The meat of pigs, horses and other hoofed animals that can be carriers of trichinae must be officially tested for trichinae. The meat may only be released for human consumption after a negative trichinae test result has been presented.
